100+ WOMEN WHO CARE

Donates Over $115,000 During The Pandemic

COVID-19 has drastically affected nonprofits and individuals across the county. As social distancing became a daily reality, annual fundraising events were put on hold, reconfigured to be held virtually or, ultimately, canceled. Fortunately, giving circles like 100+ Women Who Care Valley of the Sun were able to step up and rapidly respond to the needs of our community using its combined dollars and advocacy efforts.

Giving circles are a group of people who pool charitable donations and collectively decide where to allocate their money. Members leverage their dollars to do something bigger – and perhaps better – than they could on their own. This model of philanthropy brings people together to accomplish some serious good in a joyful way.

100+ Women Who Care Valley of the Sun members typically meet, in person, four times per year. The chapter has three sister groups: Ahwatukee, Scottsdale and East Valley. The groups were able to meet in person for their Q1 meetings. After COVID-19 began to spread in our community, the chapter leaned into technology and utilized Zoom to continue meeting virtually for the remainder of the year.

“We didn’t skip a beat,” shared Stephanie Millner, Chief Charity Officer for 100+ Women Who Care Valley of the Sun. “Canceling our giving circles was never a consideration for us. We knew the need in the community was significant, and we knew we could help.” Aside from adjusting their meeting format, the chapter made concessions for members who needed to skip a donation or contribute less due to personal circumstances.

In 2020, 100+ Women Who Care Valley of the Sun members donated over $115,000 spread across twelve charities. The Ahwatukee group donated to Bikers Against Child Abuse, Inc., an organization that creates a safer environment for abused children; A New Leaf – DVSTOP Program, a nonprofit that provides short-term emergency placement to domestic violence victims and their children; New Pathways for Youth, a group who serves youth experiencing poverty and adversities such as parent incarceration, abuse and neglect, substance abuse, and high school dropout; and Homeless Engagement Lift Partnership, a 501(c)(3) that intervenes to fill the hunger gaps often associated with homeless families.

Since the chapter’s inception in 2015, almost $700,000 has been given to local charities. This group of women has learned that giving back is better together.
